

- affair, 60 et seq.; his Confession
 de Claude, 60, 61, 68, 70, 73, 76 et seq.; his rambles round Paris, 61
 plays, et seq.;
 Arab, 63
 pawns, his coat, 64; can get, no work, 64 employed at Hachette's house, 64 et seq.; becomes acquainted with Hachette's
 authors, 66; chats with Iaine, 67
 ;
 writes
 various tales, 68; his verse
 and prose rejected
 by Hachette, 69 takes his mother to live with him, 69; his band, 70;
 reports various lectures, 70;
 sells his Contes, a Ninon, 70, 71;
 abandons verse for prose, 71;
 impressed by Madame
 Bovary, 72;
 duality of his nature, 73
 ;
 early contributions to journalism, 74; writes "La Laide," a comedy, 74; his articles, Mes Haines," 74, 96, 101; his intercourse with the Goncourts begins, 74, 109 et seq.; his impressions, of "
 Henriette
 Marechal," 75
 ;
 is attacked by Barbey
 d'Aureilly, 77; Hachette, 77
 ;
 will not be crushed
 by fools, 78;
 serves under Villernessant, 82-83; his
 "Books of Today and To-morrow," 83 et seq.; visits Littré, 86;
 Michelet, 86;
 meets Daudet, 88;
 attacks Abbe Michon, 90;
 visits Librairie
 Internationale, 90, 91;
 meets artists
 and art critics, 91;
 criticises the Salon and champions Manet, 92 et seq.;
 stays at Bennecourt, 96, 97; writes
 Le
 Voeu
 d'une Morte," 97; his Mar-pres/et Plantes," 98;
 passes from
 "L'Eve"nement
 to Le Figaro," 98; his drama " La Madeleine," 98
 ;
 107, 301, 302;
 writes a definition of the novel, 99, 100; poor and in love, 100;
 attempts a salon for
 "La Situation," 101; his Mys-teres de Marseille," 101, 107, 106
 ;
 107; his
 The Yeses, Raquin, 102
et seq.; projects a book on Balzac, 108; writes for La
 Tribune," 110, 113, 119, 123, 127, 128
 ;
 origin of his Rougon-Macquart series, 110
et seq.;
 arranges for its publication, 114
 ;
 begins La Fortune," des Rougon, 115, 123; Goncourt's
 allegation of his venality, 116
et seq.; frequents the Meurices
 salon, 116;
 meets Sully-Prudhomme
 and Coppge, 116;
 contributes to
 Le Rappel,
 117, 118
 ;
 his Republicanism, 118;
 falsity of Goncourt's
 charge, 119 et seq.; introduced to Flaubert, 121;
 marries Mile.
 Mes-ley, 121; his home Rue de La
 Condamine, 122, 123; his difficulties with "Le Siecle," 124, 125;
 begins "
 La Curee," 125;
 goes
 to southern France, 125; is exempt from military service, 126;
 runs a war newspaper at Marseilles, 126
 ;
 appointed secretary to Glais-Bizoin, 127; almost becomes a subprefect, 128, 129
 ;
 his view of politics, 130
 ;
 contributes to Le
 Semaphore/"

| | |
|---|--|
| "La Cloche," and "Le Corsaire," 181; writes "La Cure" 132, 133, 134; his publisher failing, is reduced to dire poverty, 134; recommended by L. Gautier to G. Charpentier, 134; sells the Rougon- Macquarts to Charpentier, 136 et seq.; is gen- erously treated by him, 138, 139; becomes intimate with Flaubert, Tourgenieff, Daudet, and Goncourt, 140 et seq.; suffers from various ailments, 141, 153, 154, 195, 210, 211, 213, 218, 293, 302, 392, 474, 475, 510; his play "Le resé- raquin," 141, 142; his Ventre de Paris, 142, 143; joins the Dinner of the Hissed Authors, 144, 145; becomes partial to good fare, 145; attacks Chateaubriand, 146; does not smoke, 146 ; a poor conversa- tionalist, 147; his weekly dinners, 147; publishes " La Conquete de Plassans," 147, 148; his comedy "Les Heritiers," Rabourdin," 148; his home in the Rue St. Georges, 149, 150; contributes to the "Vestnik Yevropl," 150; writes his "Faute de Mouret," 150, " 151; issues " Nouveaux Contes," Nanon, 151, 152; writes "Son Excellence Eugene Rougon," 151 et seq.; is eager to put everything in his books, 153; sees mice, 154; plans "L'Assommoir at St. Aubin, 154 et seq.; becomes dramatic critic to "Le Bien Public," 156, 157; his income in 1876, 157; his difficul- ties with "L'Assommoir, 157, 158; transfers it to " La Re'publique des | Lettres," 158; controversy re- specting his work and ideas, 159 et seq.; his adherents, 162, 163; is accused of self- advertisement by Flaubert, 163; his answer, 164; his belief in pushfulness, 165; writes "Une Page d'Amour," 166 et seq.; buys a house at J.M-X, J.CTU, J.F.L.R., JULIO J-IJ pv^u.v-'u.u.i.*E),»-«e. tendency, 195, 210 et seq.; "Le voltaire" for Le Figaro," deeply affected by Flaubert's death, 194; and by that of his Me'dan, q. v.), 168; his farce, "Le Bouton e' Rose," 168 et seq.; again charged with plagiarism, 170 at- tacks contemporary novelists, 171 et seq.; his pamphlet on Naturalism and the Republic, 174; is promised the cross of the Legion of Honour, 174 et seq.; his novel "L'Assom- moir" dramatised, 177, 178; his rise to affluence, 179; his extensions at Me'dan, 180; his collections, 180, 181; his studies, 182; develop- ment of his reforming instinct, 182 et seq., 200; writes "Nana," 185 et seq.; some of his short stories, 190; contributes to "Les Soirees de Me'dan," 191; disclaims the foundation of a school, 193; |
|---|--|